

Laser Process investing in the future

Laser Process, the Cannock based laser cutting subcontractor, is preparing for the future and, at the same time, investing in youth.

The company has appointed Derek Payne as Technical Sales Engineer for the East of England. Derek will be using his considerable experience in laser cutting, and sheet metal generally, to promote the company's activities.

Dave Lindsey, MD of Laser Process says, "We have a significant presence in the East of the country but not as much as we would like. I am confident there is a great opportunity there and Derek will help us unlock it."

Three apprentices have also joined the Laser Process ranks. Two of them will be trained in three of the main departments of the company, sales, production and CAD and the other will be trained as a multi-disciplined CNC operator.

David Lindsay adds, "The UK needs a good supply of qualified engineers, they are essential, not only for the future of this company, but for the future of the country. We are pleased that we have been able to find three young people who are committed to the future of manufacturing and ambitious in themselves."

The training of the apprentices is being carried out in-house under the supervision of Performance Through People (PTP), the locally based training provider.
