Back in the early 90s Laser Process accepted an invitation to take part in a business challenge day at Whittington Barracks, near Lichfield.

The challenge consisted of a series of tasks during the course of one day and involved a team of four from each company, from memory about eighty teams took part.

The tasks included an assault course, abseiling down a tower, rifle shooting, stretcher carrying and several other physical activities.

The Laser Process team, consisting of Dave Lindsey, Neil Lindsey, Simon Murphy and Tony Jeffries, managed to finish second. The result was pleasing - and very surprising because none of us had made any preparation for the effort involved.

The photo shows the team at the beginning of the rifle shooting competition. The team became known as the Laser Process credit control team.
